THE logical development of trade-unionism may be seen to perfection in Australia, where a state of things now exists which is very clearly described by the writer of a letter in the Times. Anglo-Australian points out that a trade union in the colonies is a close corporation. It already represents, as it must in time represent in England, the aristocracy of labour. The happy unionist commands a rate of wages which to an English mechanic would seem fabulous; but every workman, skilled or unskilled, outside the magic ring must either accept the position of a common labourer or trechife a blacking. at his own risk. To a limited number of men trade-unionism is a benefit, of course : to the working class at large in the colonies it is a tyrauny which keeps them poor, if it does not, as sometimes happens, drive them! to the Government relief works. atrikes now going on in Australia will only benefit the uniquist. Was there ever a photographer who could muster the moral courage to say to a customer, 'Sir, or Madam,' as the case may be, 'I regret to observe that your face is not scrupulously clean? If we can trust the complaint of one of their craft, the temptation to say something of this sort is often very strong. If sittors, we are told, were to wash their countenances a little before a large photograph is taken, there would be less work for retouchers, and the result would be a better portrait. Unfortunately some people are tetchy on the subject of clean faces There was once photographer who, being confronted with a decidedly dirty face contrived, as if by accident, to drop a spot of lampblack upon the customer's cheek. When it is seen how hard are the marks in the face in the latter case—for there is nothing like the lens in detecting foreign matter in crevices—it is thought that the customer might forgive the silent hint.—Daily News.
